Marset Fris LED Suspension

Marset Fris LED Suspension Light is a directional pendant by Joan Gaspar, designed around a slim glass tube that holds and protects the light source. The tube is suspended by a strap, leaving it free to rotate so the beam can be aimed upwards, downwards, or towards a chosen part of the room. Through the transparent glass, the inner structure remains visible, with one profile carrying the light source and the other working as a reflector to project the beam.

Fris is useful where a pendant needs to do more than hang straight down over a surface. It can be used above dining tables, counters, workspaces, and longer seating areas, with the direction of light adjusted after installation. The three lengths give different levels of coverage, from the shorter Fris 80 through to the longer 155 and 215cm versions, while the Black and Bronze finishes allow the fitting to sit more graphically or more warmly within a scheme.

This suspension version is hardwired with a black cable and an integrated 3000K LED. Several Fris units can also be combined using the appropriate hooks, unions, and supports, allowing more structured linear arrangements to be built where needed. Most suited to dining rooms, kitchen islands, counters, workspaces, restaurants, hotels, and interiors where a slim adjustable pendant can provide directed light across a longer area.

Please Note: The Marset Fris LED Suspension Light requires a remote 24V power supply, ordered separately. Hooks, unions, or supports may also be required depending on the installation. Fris can also be supplied in 2700K. Please contact us for more information and pricing.
