Tom Raffield Verso Pendant

The Verso Pendant strikes a delicate balance between form and function. Its ornate frame features three looping timber petals that convey movement. Named after the Latin word for ‘spin’, Verso is reminiscent of falling leaves in the wind. Tom Raffield works closely with nature. As well as drawing inspiration from the world around him for his work, his studio has a mission to protect nature as much as possible. Sustainably sourced timber is steam-bent to create the organic-looking loops of the Verso. Raffield utilises this method as it has low wastage and low energy, using just heat and water to heat the wood to a point where it can be bent and twisted. Available in ash, oak, and walnut, the Verso is expertly handcrafted to last a lifetime.

When illuminated, the Verso pendant creates a captivating display of light and shadows. The light source is partially enclosed in the centre of the shade. Pockets of light escape through gaps in the frame, casting pools of brightness that fill the surrounding space. Install in the living room to add a welcoming ambience that will draw the eye. Alternatively, hang the Verso Pendant above a bed to create a cosy sanctuary within the home.

Please Note: This pendant light is supplied with a brass socket and ceiling canopy with a black cable as standard. Other options are available, please contact us for more information and pricing.
