Artemide Patroclo Table Lamp

The Patroclo Table Lamp was designed by Gae Aulenti, an innovative architect and designer renowned for her contributions to both modern and postmodern design. The Patroclo Table Lamp exemplifies Aulenti's commitment to artistic freedom and interdisciplinary exploration. Characterised by its irregular rhomboid metal frame, the Patroclo provides a strong architectural presence in any space. The mesh frame is made from heat-resistant welded steel wire, which encloses a blown-glass body.

Originally produced in 1975, the Patroclo Table Lamp's rounded silhouette has withstood the test of time, fitting seamlessly into contemporary spaces today. When turned off, its sculptural form adds an ornamental touch to the room. When illuminated, the steel structure captures and transforms light, creating a captivating interplay of reflections and shadows. This refracted and scattered light generates an intense and evocative atmosphere with an ever-changing visual effect. Each lamp is expertly handcrafted by skilled artisans, making each piece unique to its owner.
