Artek A810 Floor Lamp

The Artek A810 floor lamp, designed by Alvar Aalto in 1959, is a masterclass in combining form and function. Originally created for the National Pensions Institute in Helsinki, the lamp features two hand-riveted shades made from lacquered metal strips. The interplay of these strips creates both direct and indirect light, offering a well-balanced illumination that is both practical and atmospheric. The sleek, minimalist design is enhanced by the base, wrapped in hand-sewn black leather, and a polished brass collar, adding a touch of luxury to the piece. The A810 reflects Aalto's skill in designing lighting that elevates a space while remaining functional.

This floor lamp is perfect for adding both style and substance to a room, whether placed in a living room, study, or public space. Its tall, elegant profile draws the eye without overwhelming the surrounding decor. With its ability to cast both upward and downward light, the A810 provides versatile lighting, suitable for creating a cosy reading nook or as a feature light in a larger space. Its timeless design ensures it remains a favourite among architects and interior designers, bringing an element of sophistication to any environment.
